

I am writing to express concern over migratory birds and communication towers. These towers, springing up at increasing rates, have already caused millions of fatalities. We need immediate action and research into the effects of these deaths and possible ways to prevent them. There seem to be many low tech ways, such as investigating established migration routes to avoid conflicting placement, and lights and other signals being required on all towers. These financial burdens should fall on the telecom companies.